ABSTRACT

Primary objectives of the first comprehensive study of New Mexico Pueblo school dropouts were to identify and locate such dropouts, to determine reasons for Pueblo dropouts, and to identify types of counseling and services available. Of 710 identified dropouts, 328 from the 19 Pueblos were interviewed in home visits. Personal reasons (seeing no reason for being in school, pregnancy) accounted for 47.9% of the dropouts; school problems (boredom, inability to get along with teachers and classmates led to 38.7%; family and health problems caused the rest. Teachers were frequently available to help with academic problems, mainly in math and science, but counselors were generally not available to help with personal problems. About 87% of the dropouts planned to continue their educations either by earning a G.E.D. or by attending school. Although 37.3% were uncertain of career plans, 32% planned for vocations and 9.7% for paraprofessional jobs. Results tabulated by school district and individual Pueblo were similar in most cases, but there were some sex-related differences. In terms of course design, care should be taken to maintain interest for Pueblo students; current, informative classes in birth control and family planning should be developed and implemented. Tutorial services and the number of trained school counselors should be increased. The report contains a resource directory. (SB)

INTRODUCTION

This study is the first comprehensive study on dropouts within the nineteen (19) Pueblos of New Mexico. It is hoped that the analysis of this information will serve to bring to light the major contributing factors for students electing to withdraw from school, and to serve as a source of information upon which future programs can be designed to remedy this problem.

In an effort to make this information as useful as possible the report has been divided into four (4) sub-sections.

Sub-section (1) Will present a composite picture for the 19 Pueblos. In this manner an overall picture of the dropout problem can be examined.

Sub-section (2) Will present data as it applies to nine (9) school districts which enroll Pueblo students.

Sub-section (3) Will present data as it applies to each of the 19 Pueblos.

Sub-section (4) Will present data to examine if a sex differential exists.

This project was conducted by the All Indian Pueblo Council, Inc., Office of Education and was sponsored by the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA), Albuquerque Area Office, Title IV, ESEA. The project began in October, 1977 and terminated on June 30, 1978.

Problem

In order to plan a program for a specific group of persons, information is required to determine their needs. The pueblo dropout problem has always been known to be serious but no specific data has been collected to document its severity.

Programs have been developed in an attempt to fulfill the needs of dropouts, however, without documentation on which to base program reform, substantive change cannot be achieved. Schools and other educational agencies have offered programs such as the GED (General Educational Development) classes, vocational classes and other similar programs to enhance the dropout's education. As well-intentioned as they may have been these programs have been offered without any understanding of why these students left school. Hence, in many instances, classes have been oblivious of student desires and learning needs. These programs have also lacked the support of the community because the basic needs as understood by the community at large were not met.

Without information on which to base program reform meaningful classes cannot be developed to meet the needs of the dropout. An evaluation of the dropout situation has been long overdue.

One of the needs is to try to reduce the number of dropouts and to help more young pueblo men and women find profitable employment. People with a good high school education have a much greater job opportunity than those who have not graduated or have not obtained high school skills. Study after study has shown that there is a direct relationship between education and employment. Table 1 contains unemployment rates for the United States, New Mexico, and the 19 pueblos. As the table indicates, the pueblo unemployment rate is four times higher than that of the State of New Mexico and over five times higher than that of the United States.

Table 1

Unemployment Rates for the 19 Pueblos
the State of New Mexico, and the United States

	March/April 1977
19 Pueblos	35.7%
State of New Mexico	9.0%
United States	7.0%

Individuals unemployed or without education and training by which to build a future often express hopelessness through alcohol and drug abuse. The incidence of drug abuse among pueblo juveniles is 24%, for the pueblos as a whole it is 28% or three times higher than the national average.

The dropout rate and its effects express a real need for an evaluation of the dropout problem. This survey was aimed at fulfilling the need for dropout data and information with the belief that better programs and classes can be structured to improve the educational and economic opportunities for pueblo youth who have left school.

Purpose of the Study

The purpose of this study was to survey the 19 pueblos and collect information concerning pueblo dropouts* between 16 and 21 years of age. The specific objectives were as follows:

- 1) Identify and locate dropouts between 16 and 21 years of age.
- 2) Determine reasons for pueblo dropouts.
- 3) Identify types of counseling and services available.
- 4) Identify students who are in need of academic counseling and arrange for students to be counseled.
- 5) Identify students with a suspected handicap and arrange for diagnostic screening by a multi-disciplinary team.

While conducting the study, objectives four (4) and five (5) became secondary objectives. The students who were in need of academic counseling and/or suspected of having a handicap were referred to organizations providing the needed services however no follow-up activities were initiated. As a result, the main project effort focused on objectives one through three.

After the data was collected, questions dealing with five (5) major categories were analyzed. These categories dealt with:

- 1) Reasons for withdrawing from school.
- 2) Availability of counselors and/or academic help within the school.
- 3) The academic subjects which proved to be the most difficult while in school.

- 4) Medical tests performed on the students, i.e., hearing test, vision test, etc.
- 5) Future plans for schooling or a career.

*By the term "dropouts" we refer to those persons between ages 16-21 who have for any reason stopped attending either primary or secondary school. For us the term does not include any individuals who have earned a GED (General Educational Development) diploma after leaving school.

METHODS AND PROCEDURES

Survey Instrument

The primary survey instrument used in the collection of data was the questionnaire (see Appendix A).

To develop the questionnaire the staff consulted a Navajo individual who had conducted a study on Navajo dropouts. The staff also gathered ideas and input from other people who were involved with surveying dropouts. Questionnaires on dropouts developed by the University of New Mexico and SIPI (Southwestern Indian Polytechnic Institute) were reviewed for questions that might be pertinent for this study. Studies conducted on dropouts in other areas were read. Based upon the data collected a questionnaire was constructed. Upon completion, the first questionnaire was field tested at one of the Northern Pueblos. Some weaknesses became apparent and revisions had to be made.

The major change in the revised questionnaire was to change from judgemental to multiple choice type questions because it was found that the individuals interviewed had difficulty responding to questions that required an opinion response. Also, more questions were added. The revised questionnaire was tested in one Pueblo. It was found to be more suitable and it was decided that this questionnaire be used for all interviews.

Identifying Target Group

Seven hundred and ten (710) dropouts between ages 16-21 were identified in the 19 Pueblos. Of this number, three hundred and twenty-eight (328) were actually interviewed.

Names were identified by contacting the public schools that had Indian students enrolled. Other schools contacted were Albuquerque Indian School, Southwestern Indian Polytechnic Institute, Institute of American Indian Arts, and St. Catherines. Individual folders for all 19 Pueblos were now prepared. They contained the partial list of dropouts and local individuals who could be of help in identifying more dropouts and in locating them.

Pueblo visits were started with the partial list and names of local individuals. The staff followed the usual procedure of first going to the Governor's Office to acquaint officials with the study and to enlist their help in getting a more complete list. In each Pueblo, with the help of the census workers, tribal organizations and/or individuals, additional names were collected.

The Interview

We began interviews in a Pueblo only after every means of identifying dropouts was exhausted and when we believed the list containing the names for that particular Pueblo was reasonably accurate.

The first third of the interview sessions were difficult because much time was consumed in locating the homes of the students. Later, All Indian Pueblo Council, Manpower Office personnel or a local tribal organization were utilized to help locate homes of the dropouts. This did not result in more interviews but was a more efficient means of locating homes.

Those not interviewed could not be reached because either they refused to be interviewed, were working, were not at home, or were relocated out of state. Those who were interviewed were all friendly and seemed to want to answer questions honestly. In many instances more than one attempt was made of a home visit before the individual was found at home. Prior arrangements for a home visit were usually not scheduled since most of the dropouts did not have telephones. We hesitated to formally schedule home visits because appointments made were not kept. Perhaps the prospect of an interview was frightening to those individuals.

The females were most often found on the first visit. The males were harder to locate for interviews. When it was learned that an individual lived away from the pueblo no attempt of a home visit was made but their whereabouts was documented.

The actual interview took approximately one-half hour. Always the purpose for the visit had to be explained and consent to be interviewed asked. Often family members curiosity was aroused and they became a part of the interview session.

Resource Directory

After interview sessions individuals would often ask for information about various educational programs. The resource directory that was compiled (see Appendix B) was of benefit during these times. Certain of the programs proved to be of more interest to the interviewees.

Directories from several organizations were used to complete the resource directory. This directory should continue to serve as a helpful guide to local tribal organizations who may wish to make use of services these organizations are providing.

CONCLUSIONS

Sub-Section 1

Composite Results

In an effort to examine the major factor leading to students deciding to withdraw from school a survey instrument (see Appendix A) was constructed and administered to 328 students out of a total number of 710 who had previously dropped out of school. Of the 328 students contacted 156 were male and 172 were female. Students from 9 school districts and 18 Pueblos were contacted for this survey (one Pueblo had only one drop-out who could not be contacted).

For the purpose of examining the data, questions dealing with five major categories were analyzed. These questions dealt with:

- (1) Reasons for withdrawing from school.
- (2) Availability of counseling and/or academic help within the school.
- (3) The academic subjects which proved to be the most difficult while in school.
- (4) Medical testing carried out on the students, i.e., hearing tests, vision tests, etc.
- (5) Future plans for schooling or a career.

In the area of reasons for dropping out of school 23 alternatives were possible for the students to select from. These alternatives were grouped into categories of: (1) Family reasons; (2) Personal reasons; (3) School-related reasons; and (4) Health factors.

N.B. Because of multiple responses as well as question omissions by the respondents, totals in the data summary tables (i.e., Tables 3 thru 11) will sometimes differ from the actual frequencies recorded in the column or row.

For the entire sample personal reasons were specified most often for dropping out of school. 47.9 percent of all responses were selected from within this category. The second largest percentage was found in the area of school reasons, 38.7 percent, followed by family reasons, 16.5 percent, and finally health factors 2.7 percent.

Table 2

Reasons for Withdrawing by Category	Percent
Personal	47.9
School	38.7
Family	16.5
Health	2.7

Reasons for withdrawing from school:

Specifically the five most frequently mentioned reasons for withdrawing (presented in rank order from highest to lowest) were:

- | | |
|----------------------|---|
| Personal
Category | 1. Could not see a reason for being in school. |
| | 2. Going to have a baby. |
| | 3. Other (individual specific comments of a personal nature.) |
| School
Category | 1. School was boring. |
| | 2. Could not get along with teachers or classmates. |

The most frequently selected response from the Family category was:

To find a job to help support the family.

The statistics concerning the complete rankings of all 23 possible responses can be found in Sub-Section 2, page 16.

Availability of counseling and/or academic help.

When questioned as to whether academic and/or counseling help was available to students who were having problems the students indicated that in the majority of cases 74.2 percent of the teachers were available to give help. However, students indicated that 47.5 percent of the time counselors were not available for academic or personal problems.

Of the 326 responses to the question of whether a special teacher or tutor was available to students having academic difficulty 211 or 64.7 percent of the students answered negatively, only 94 or 28.8 percent answered yes and 21 or 6.4 percent were not aware if special help was or was not available.

Problems with academic subjects

Of those students indicating that they did have problems with some school subjects the majority (77%) indicated that problems arose in the areas of Math and Science (70 percent). Other mentioned areas were Reading/English 20.4 percent, and History 9.5 percent. Only 23 percent of the sample indicated that they experienced no special academic problems.

Medical testing

Results of this survey indicated that for this group of students:

83.5 percent had been given hearing tests

87.0 percent had taken eye examinations.

However, less than 5 percent of these students indicated that they were tested for speech or other physical problems.

Future plans for school or a career

The last major category of questions dealt with plans for future schooling and/or a career.

In the area of schooling, 61.1 percent of the students indicated that they would choose a program leading to a GED if they were to return to school at the present time. Complete results of this question indicated that students would choose to educate themselves in the following manner:

61.1 percent A program for a GED

25.7 percent Return to school

10.5 percent Not interested in further education at this time

2.4 percent Self-improvement courses

When asked what career these students had planned for the future the responses (in rank order) were:

(1) 37.3 percent Uncertain

(2) 32.1 percent Vocational

(3) 9.7 percent Paraprofessional

(4) 6.1 percent Housewife

- (5) 5.8 percent Silversmithing or other traditional cultural crafts
- (6) 5.5 percent Laborer
- (7) 3.3 percent College

Sub-Section 2

School Districts

The students represented in this data came from nine (9) school districts in New Mexico. These districts include: Bernalillo, Espanola, Gallup-McKinley, Grants, Jemez, Los Lunas, Penasco, Pojoaque, and Taos.

The data has been sorted in this manner to examine if reasons for withdrawing from school differed among the school districts.

It appears that factors leading to students electing to withdraw from school are similar in all districts. Responses to the entire survey differed only in a couple of instances for this student population.

In the area of reasons for withdrawing from school, students from eight of the nine school districts most frequently mentioned personal reasons for dropping out.

However, for Gallup-McKinley Schools 47 percent of the students indicated that they elected to withdraw from school because of factors within the school itself; only 30% of the time did they specify personal reasons.

In all nine school districts surveyed students indicated that math and science were the most difficult school subjects.

There were no deviations to the questions concerning whether or not teachers were helpful when students were having academic difficulty. Students from all nine districts answered positively to this question.

However, a large number of students from seven of the districts felt the counselors were not generally available for personal or academic problems. Especially in the districts of Bernalillo and Gallup-McKinley this response was overwhelmingly negative. Students from these two districts responded that more often than not counselors were unavailable. In Bernalillo 54.3 percent of the students felt that they were unable to get counseling support and in Gallup-McKinley this figure rose to 65.2 percent.

In response to whether special teachers or tutors were available for academic problems only those students from Taos District answered positively. In all other districts an overwhelming majority of the students indicated that special help for academic problems was unavailable.

Responses to all other questions in the survey were similar throughout the districts.

Individual Pueblo Data

Students from 18 Pueblos were represented by this data. These Pueblos include: Acoma, Cochiti, Isleta, Jemez, Laguna, Nambe, Picuris, Pojoaque, San Ildefonso, San Felipe, San Juan, Santa Ana, Santa Clara, Santo Domingo, Taos, Tesuque, Zia, and Zuni (Sandia Pueblo had only one dropout who could not be contacted).

As was found in the school district analysis only minor differences appeared when the data was divided to examine individual Pueblos.

Students from all Pueblos except for Zuni indicated that the decision to withdraw was prompted by personal concerns. In the case of Zuni Pueblo, school factors were mentioned most often for dropping out.

Survey results indicated that a large number of students believed that counseling help was generally not available especially those students from San Felipe and Zuni. In both these Pueblos, the majority of students indicated that when they had need of personal counseling it was not adequately available.

Out of the 18 Pueblos only those students from Taos indicated that special teachers or tutors were available for special academic problems. All other Pueblos indicated overwhelmingly that this type of help was unavailable.

Sex Differential Data

In an attempt to examine where reasons for dropping out differ among male and female students the following data will be presented.

For males the singularly most frequently mentioned reason for withdrawing from school was selected from the category of personal reasons, specifically "Could not see a reason for being in school." However, school factors as a total category was picked most often for dropping out. 55.1 percent of responses were in this category.

For females the overwhelming reason for withdrawing was pregnancy. Females also most often selected other personal reasons as a combined category of reasons for dropping out.

The percentages to all the other 21 possible choices were similar for both male and female students.

Male and female responses to questions concerning the availability of counselors, tutors and help from teachers showed little variance because of sex.

The list of available school subjects that proved difficult for this population of students indicated that on a percentage basis males and females had equal difficulty with school subjects.

No discernible differences were found for this group of students concerning what further education they would prefer. Both males and females indicated that they would prefer to enroll in a GED program.

In response to the question "What kind of a career are you thinking about" females indicated that they were "Uncertain" about a future career. Males on the other hand specified a vocational career 50.1 percent of the time. Only 47 or 30.1 percent of males were uncertain at this time.

Conclusions and Recommendations

It appears from the examination of the data that although the decision to withdraw from school can be based on many factors certain identifiable problems are endemic to every school system surveyed.

Disregarding pregnancy as a reason for dropping out, students have elected to leave school because of the systems apparent inability to maintain interest and prove viability to this population of individuals.

The students represented by this data have indicated that over 55.0 percent of the time boring classes or the inability to see the value of their education has led to their decision to withdraw. These reasons combined with the fact the 23 students were unable to "get along" with teachers or classmates account for 62.0 percent of the reasons for dropping out.

The inability to "get along" with teachers or classmates becomes an important area of concern in light of the fact that 48.0 percent of the sample indicated that adequate counseling staff was not available for personal problems.

Another very important concern which deserves further study is the fact that although only 4.0 percent of the females and 1.3 percent of the males left school to get married 38 percent of the females withdrew because of pregnancy. In light of this fact it appears that every district could benefit from the implementation of birth-control and family planning educational programs.

One particularly distressing statistic that has resulted from this survey is that, although nearly 80.0 percent of the dropouts indicated they had some specific academic difficulty only 29.0 percent of the sample were able to acquire help in the form of a special teacher or tutor.

Although it is recognized that a method to alleviate all the factors leading to dropping out by Indian students cannot be developed and implemented overnight the data presented in this report should be utilized in an effort to begin to attack this problem.

In conclusion, it is suggested that examination of this data by a responsible official from each school district and pueblo would be a viable starting point to begin program development in an effort to lower these figures in future years.

Recommendations

1. Care should be taken in the design of course development. If, for instance, the Pueblo communities were contacted and had participated in this manner the viability of the students' education may have been enhanced.
2. Develop and implement informative and up-to-date classes in family planning and birth control.
3. Increase the numbers of trained school counselors. Students could also benefit from peer and lay counselors who would be available in times of crisis.
4. Provide or strengthen existing tutorial service for students identified as having academic difficulty. An overwhelming majority of the students in this survey were unable to receive special help when necessary.

5. Adequately publicize the availability of counseling and tutorial services. A significant number of students in this survey were unaware that help existed.
6. Provide or strengthen existing on-site GED programs for those individuals wishing to further educate themselves in this manner.
7. In light of the fact that 43.0 percent of the females in this survey were uncertain about future careers it would appear that courses in career education would be an important asset to each district.
8. The Johnson O'Malley-Title IV Program should re-examine their objectives in order to provide the needed services identified in this report especially in the areas of counselor and tutorial services.
